What is Autism?

Autism is a complex neurobiological spectrum disorder encompassing Autistic Disorder, PDD NOS and Asperger's Disorder. It occurs in all racial, ethnic and social groups and is four times more likely to strike boys than girls. Autism impairs a person's ability to communicate, understand and relate to others socially and emotionally. It is also associated with unproductive repetitive behaviors; sensory sensitivities to light, smell, sound and touch; eccentric behaviors and rigid routines; preoccupation with subjects and obsessions such as obsessively arranging objects. Symptoms can range from more moderate to profoundly severe. Autism in all degrees of severity typically results in functional disability.
